

ABSTRACT

A vehicle body assembly has an outer skin panel defining an exterior surface for a vehicle. An inner skin panel is spaced from the outer skin panel. An energy absorbing body is located between the inner skin panel and the outer skin panel such that the energy absorbing body will be aligned with a hard point of the vehicle. The energy absorbing body may be foam block or a hollow body such as a fluid reservoir.